

Afro Puerto Rican Women Building Environmental Justice: Decolonizing Feminisms

Afro Puerto Rican Women Building Environmental Justice:

Decolonizing Feminisms is a groundbreaking work that examines the intersection of race, gender, and class in the environmental justice movement in Puerto Rico. Through a series of case studies and interviews, the book highlights the experiences of Afro Puerto Rican women who are working to protect their communities from environmental hazards.

The book is divided into three parts. The first part provides an overview of the environmental justice movement in Puerto Rico, with a focus on the role of Afro Puerto Rican women. The second part examines the specific experiences of Afro Puerto Rican women who are working to address environmental hazards in their communities. The third part explores the theoretical implications of the book's findings, and argues for a decolonial feminist approach to environmental justice.

Afro Puerto Rican Women Building Environmental Justice:

Decolonizing Feminisms is an essential read for anyone interested in the environmental justice movement, race and gender studies, or Puerto Rican studies.
