Lee was born in San Francisco, California, on November 27, 1940, to Chinese parents. He began training in kung fu at a young age and quickly became proficient in the art. In 1959, Lee won the Hong Kong Cha-Cha Championship, and in 1964, he won the Long Beach International Karate Championship.

Lee's martial arts skills and charismatic personality caught the attention of Hollywood producers, and he began starring in films in the mid-1960s. His first major role was in the 1966 film The Big Boss, which was a huge success in Hong Kong and Asia.

Lee went on to star in a number of other popular films, including Fist of Fury (1972), Enter the Dragon (1973), and Game of Death (1978). He also developed his own unique martial art, Jeet Kune Do, which emphasized speed, power, and efficiency.

Lee died tragically in 1973 at the age of 32 from an allergic reaction to a painkiller. However, his legacy continues to live on through his films, his writings, and his students.
