Eric Pleska is a man on a mission. He's cycling across America to raise awareness about the importance of insects. But he's not ng it alone. He's got a team of tiny companions: a swarm of bugs.

Pleska's journey began in April 2022, when he set off from his home in Maine. He's been cycling ever since, averaging over 100 miles per day. Along the way, he's been stopping at schools, libraries, and community centers to give talks about the importance of insects.

"Insects are essential to our planet," Pleska says. "They pollinate our plants, they decompose our waste, and they're a food source for birds and other animals. But insects are in decline around the world, due to habitat loss, climate change, and pesticides. We need to take action to protect them."

Pleska's journey has been an adventure, but it's also been a challenge. He's faced extreme weather, mechanical problems, and even a few injuries. But he's never given up.

"I'm ng this because I believe in the importance of insects," Pleska says. "I want to show people that they're not just pests. They're vital to our planet's health."

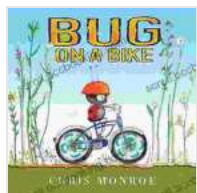

Pleska's journey has been documented in a book, Bug on Bike. The book is a beautifully written and inspiring story that will appeal to nature lovers, cyclists, and anyone looking for an adventure.

In Bug on Bike, Pleska shares his experiences cycling across America with a swarm of bugs. He describes the challenges he's faced, the people he's met, and the lessons he's learned. He also provides a wealth of information about insects, their importance to the environment, and what we can do to protect them.

Bug on Bike is a must-read for anyone who cares about the environment. It's a story that will inspire you, educate you, and make you appreciate the beauty of the natural world.
