This powerful and moving collection of essays offers a rare glimpse into the lives of young people who have been incarcerated in the juvenile justice system.

In their own words, these young people share their experiences of arrest, detention, and trial. They write about the challenges they faced behind bars, including isolation, violence, and lack of access to education and mental health services. They also write about their hopes and dreams for the future.

"Kids in Orange" is a must-read for anyone who wants to understand the challenges facing our youth and the importance of investing in their future. It is a powerful reminder that these young people are not throwaways. They are our children, and they deserve a chance to turn their lives around.
