In the years leading up to World War II, Martha Dodd, the daughter of the American ambassador to Germany, witnessed the rise of the Nazi regime firsthand. She saw the persecution of Jews, the suppression of dissent, and the growing militarism that would eventually lead to war. But she also saw the courage and resilience of the German people, and the power of love to overcome even the darkest of times.

In her memoir, Love, Terror, and an American Family in Hitler's Berlin, Martha Dodd tells the extraordinary story of her family's experience in Nazi Germany. She writes about her father's diplomatic efforts to prevent war, her mother's work with refugees, and her own experiences as a young woman coming of age in a world on the brink of collapse.

Martha Dodd was a keen observer of the Nazi regime, and her memoir provides a unique and valuable insight into the events of that time. She saw the Nazis' rise to power, their persecution of Jews and other minorities, and their preparations for war. She also saw the courage and resilience of the German people, and the power of love to overcome even the darkest of times.

Love, Terror, and an American Family in Hitler's Berlin is a gripping tale of courage, resilience, and love in the face of unimaginable evil. It is a story that will stay with you long after you finish reading it.

The Dodd Family

The Dodd family was a prominent American family with a long history of public service. Martha's father, William Dodd, was a historian and diplomat who served as the American ambassador to Germany from 1933 to 1937. Martha's mother, Martha Dodd Stern, was a writer and social activist who worked with refugees during the Nazi regime.

The Dodds were a close-knit family, and they loved their adopted country of Germany. They were horrified by the rise of the Nazi regime, and they did everything they could to help those who were being persecuted.

Martha Dodd

Martha Dodd was born in 1908 in Chicago, Illinois. She was a bright and curious child, and she loved to learn. She attended the University of Chicago, where she studied history and political science. After graduating from college, Martha moved to Berlin with her family. She quickly became fluent in German, and she developed a deep love for the country and its people.

Martha Dodd was a keen observer of the Nazi regime, and she witnessed firsthand the persecution of Jews and other minorities. She also saw the courage and resilience of the German people, and she was inspired by their determination to resist the Nazis.

In 1936, Martha Dodd married Boris Stern, a Russian diplomat. The couple had two children, a son and a daughter. After the war, Martha Dodd and her family returned to the United States. She continued to write and speak out against fascism and war.
