In the face of rising inequality, economic stagnation, and technological disruption, the world is in dire need of new ideas and innovative solutions. "Predators and Creators in Capitalism's Future, Updated Edition," by acclaimed economist Mariana Mazzucato, delivers a thought-provoking and groundbreaking exploration of the forces shaping our economic landscape.

With meticulous research and engaging prose, Mazzucato challenges the conventional wisdom that pits innovators against rent-seekers, predators against creators. Instead, she argues that capitalism's future hinges on the dynamic interplay between these two forces.

Through real-world examples drawn from industries such as pharmaceuticals, renewable energy, and technology, Mazzucato reveals the critical role of public investment in driving innovation and creating value. She highlights that governments can and should play an active role in shaping the economy, not merely through regulation, but also through targeted investments that unleash the potential of the private sector.

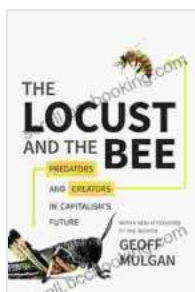

"Predators and Creators" reframes the debate on capitalism, offering a fresh perspective that empowers governments to embrace their role as value creators. Mazzucato proposes a transformative agenda, one that focuses on mission-oriented innovation, long-term investment horizons, and a shift from shareholder value to stakeholder value.

The updated edition of this groundbreaking book includes a new and extensive updates, reflecting the profound changes brought about by the COVID-19 pandemic and the rapid acceleration of digital transformation. Mazzucato offers cutting-edge insights on the challenges and opportunities facing our economies, providing essential guidance for policymakers, business leaders, and anyone concerned about the future of capitalism.
