The Reservoirs of Normality and Autism

Dr. Noll proposes that the human brain contains two distinct reservoirs: the reservoir of normalcy and the reservoir of autism. The reservoir of normalcy is responsible for cognitive, emotional, and behavioral functions that are considered typical or neurotypical. The reservoir of autism, on the other hand, is associated with the symptoms and challenges commonly seen in individuals with ASD.

According to Dr. Noll, autism develops when there is an imbalance between these two reservoirs, with the reservoir of autism becoming dominant. This imbalance can result from a variety of factors, including genetic predispositions, environmental triggers, and prenatal or birth complications.

Restoring Balance through Tapping

The核心原则of Dr. Noll's approach is to tap into the reservoir of normalcy and strengthen its influence over the reservoir of autism. This is achieved through a series of targeted exercises and therapies designed to:

* Improve sensory processing * Enhance cognitive skills * Regulate emotions * Develop social skills * Promote communication

By tapping into the reservoir of normalcy, individuals with ASD can gradually restore balance to their brains and experience significant improvements in their symptoms and functioning.

The Benefits of Tapping Therapy

Dr. Noll's tapping therapy has been shown to offer numerous benefits for individuals with ASD, including:

* Reduced hyperactivity and impulsivity * Improved attention and focus * Enhanced social skills and communication abilities * Reduced anxiety and depression * Improved cognitive functioning * Increased independence and self-reliance
