Fred Korematsu: A Champion of Civil Liberties

Fred Korematsu was a Japanese American who was wrongfully imprisoned in an internment camp during World War II. Refusing to accept the injustice of his imprisonment, he challenged the government's actions in court. His case went all the way to the Supreme Court, where he lost in a controversial decision that upheld the internment policy. However, decades later, Korematsu's conviction was overturned, and he received the Presidential Medal of Freedom for his unwavering commitment to justice.

Jackie Robinson: Breaking the Color Barrier in Baseball

Jackie Robinson, an African American who broke the color barrier in Major League Baseball

Jackie Robinson was an African American who broke the color barrier in Major League Baseball in 1947. His signing with the Brooklyn Dodgers marked a turning point in American sports and society, challenging the deeply ingrained racism that had excluded African Americans from professional baseball. Robinson faced countless threats and obstacles during his career, but his determination and resilience ultimately paved the way for greater integration and equality in both baseball and American society as a whole.
